Compass station WNTC was founded by the Clarkson Electronic Society in 1947. After much preparatory work the station went on the air for the first time on March 27, 1948. At that time it was housed on the second floor of the Executive Building. This arrangement proved to be unsuitable for expansion, so the loft of the barn on the Potsdam State Teachers College campus was acquired. Here was built, entirely through the efforts of the students of Clarkson College and Potsdam State Teachers College, a small studio, a control room, a record library, an arts room, and a large studio to accommodate forty persons. A new console and transmitter have been acquired recently.

As an activity, the station offers excellent opportunities both in entertainment and engineering.

WNTC is a member of the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System, and is owned and operated jointly by Clarkson College and Potsdam State Teachers College.

Radio station WOCT, Malone, is operated by the Malone Branch Radio Club on a carrier current basis one hour per night, five nights a week. This year the membership constructed a new studio in Gilbert Hall, from which all broadcasts to Malone and vicinity are made.
